PHILADELPHIA WINS AGAIN

Burdick Pitches for Indianapolis, and Is Hit Very Hard in Two Innings, Giving Wright's Men a Lead Which the Vis itors Could Not Overcome-Results of the Other League and American Games.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. PHILADELPHIA, Oct 5 .- The Philadelphias won their third successive victory over the Indianapolis club to-day, by a score of 5 to 2. There was an improvement in the weather, and over 500 people were present. Philadelphia won by hitting Burdick hard in the first and fourth innings. After the fourth not a safe hit was made off him. Sanders's curves puzzled the visitors, and their five hits were scattered. The only feature was Irwin's fine work at short. The Philadelphias scored two runs in the first on a two-baser by Fogarty and a home-run hit over the right-field wall by Wood. In the fourth a single by Clements, Myers's muff of Mulvey's fly, a two-baser by Irwin and a single by Delebanty let in three more runs. Indian-apolis scored in the first on a single by Denny, a steal, a wild throw by Clements and a wild pitch. In the second Glasscock scored on his

IN HARRISON'S HOME.

The General's Daily Visitors and the Manner in Which He Impressed Them.

I called upon General Harrison this morning, at a time when he was receiving a number of battered veterans in blue uniforms, decorated with the Grand Army badge From their appearance one could see that these men had traveled a considerable distance. There was a cordiality in the General's greeting of them that was not assumed, and they felt it. He recognized them as old componions in arms-as men who had struggled in the front, and who might be proud of the honorable scars they bere in token of their loyalty.

One grizzled old soldier had lost an eye and carried the mark of a saber cut across his cheek.

He pathetically said that he was thankful for the eye that was left, that he might see the General, and he hoped be might see him later in the White House He told where he bad served in the war and where he had received one and another of his wounds. When the General showed his familiarity with some of the engagements mentioned, and was able to appreciatively supplement his narration, the poor old fellow was moved to tears. When he left 'the house with his companions-one of whom lacked an arm-it was with a fervent "God bless you, General: this is a happy day for me!"

It was only a little incident, but the attention which the General showed this poor, way-worn old man, without any "influence" and without any reason for his visit-except that it was to him an act of devotion to the man who represented the loyal party in whose interest he had suffered-impressed me strongly. Other men, committeemen and distinguished visitors, were allowed to await their turn, and the old veteran, who appeared as if he might have suffered deprivations in order that he might make this

A little while afterward a group of visitors from Columbus, Ohio, arrived. They came mainly from curiosity to see the man of whom they had heard so much. "Some of us are Republicans and some of us are Democrats, General," said the spokesman of the party. "but we all wanted to see you." The General assured them they were welcome, entirely irrespective of their politice, and showed them the models of the log cabins of 1840, and several campaign banners of the same year, which had been pre-sented to him recently, and in which his visitors took great interest. As the two Democrats of the party walked down the steps, one of them remarked to the other that the General was a

"brick," and that it was a pity he wasn't the

It was interesting to watch these early-morning visitors. One man insisted upon elaborately explaining to the General just what tariff regulations the country required, and another had a scheme for the judicious distribution of the treasury surplus. The General listened to them patiently-they were his guests for the time being, and he treated them considerately. As he looked toward me there was not even the ghost of a twinkle in his eye; he was as serious as though he might have been listening to the argu-

No man, I think, could better fulfill the delicate duties before him in this interval between nomination and election than does General Harrison. In some respects he reminds me of Garfield, only I feel that he is a stronger man, and may be a wiser man, than was Garfield. But he has the same sturdy, honest, straightforward way about him, and a manner as kindly.

If all the voters in this country could visit

General Harrison between now and election time, I think his majority would be something phenomenal in the history of majorities. By his personality he impresses upon those who meet him the feeling that he is a careful, thoughtful, conscientious and able man; that he is a man of strong character and firm convictions, and that he is not lacking either in cour-

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

The Flag and the Parties.

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Journals The other day I noticed in the window of Democratic newspaper office the American flag, and written under it a notice to the effect that the assertion that the American flag is the emblem of the Republican party is a slander on the American people. As I stood looking at the notice and thinking of the change which has evidently come over the Democracy. Uncle James came along and stopped, with the remark: "I am glad the Lafayette Journal has taken the oath of allegiance and hung out the flag; although," said he, "I don't quite agree with the assertion that the American flag is the emblem of any party. I think it should be the emblem of all political parties. "Don't you remember in '61 how we carried the old flag across the Potomac at Long Bridge, up the heights of Arlington, past the forts, out through shady lanes and across the green fields of old Virginial How the enemy's skirmishers fled at our approach; the very sight of the old flag seemed to cause those Southrons to fiee before us. "When we camped that night on the glorious hills of old Virginia and filled our canteens at the limpid spring in the meadow, our hearts were filled with high hopes for the morrow and with pity for our schoolmates who were too ten-der-hearted to enlist. How we envied the colonel his mustache, and hoped the war would last till ours grew to equal length with his. How gayly we 'went in' next morning, declaring the old flag should be the emblem of all Americans. How before that fatal day was over the old flag was dragged in the dust. How our regiment that marched to the front a thousand strong Came out-well, every boy who got back to Washington declared he was the only one left.

"The men who won the field that fatal day were Americans. The men who won the field that fatal day did not fight under the glorious folds of the American flag. After that ignoble flight, we met them in many a bloody fight, in ebady lane, or cypress swamp, or mountain-side. We carried the stripes and stars. They fought under the stars and bars. They were Americans. We were Americans.

"Peace, blessed peace, came at last. We all marched home, the old flag floating above us. But not all. We buried the bravest, and truest. by bush, and brake, and cotton-field. We have ever since cherished the flag along with the memories of those dark, bloody, glorious days. We have allowed no stranger to take charge of the emblem of the government we fought for and the government we love.

"When we hold a political meeting, we consider that politics means government, and government to us means a free American government, and the emblem of that government is the glorious old American flag. Any party that is not good enough to carry the flag as its emblem is not good enough for us.

"Our government is now temporarily in the hands of the men who carried and fought for the stars and bars, headed by a man who was too cowardly to swing a saber for and in defense of the cause we loved, and too base to fight for the old flag. But beware," said Uncle Jim to the editor, who came out to protest against exhibiting a bloody garment so near the postoffice-"beware how you touch that old flag. We have allowed you to approach, even to take charge, of the house of our common father. We have killed the fatted calf and you have filled your bellies from the good things on our father's table; but from your actions, from your looks, from the stench of treason that fills the hall and is beginning to pervade the higher courts, we conclude you are not yet fit to touch the flag-not yet fit to handle and arrange the sacred folds After November you must go purge yourselves. Wash and be clean. Throw away the clock of treason. Put away all the other garments of secession. Take a thorough bath in Salt river. The Sentinel prints this morning, with a great many gentle expressions of admiration, what purports to be a circular-letter issued by me and addressed to the various league clubs of the State. I have one prepared giving the clubs some information in regard to a few little matters of common Democratic practice at election times, such as forging tallysheets, buring votes, stuffing the ballot-box, etc. I have some information on that matter that will do to point a moral and adorn a tale. OLD HUTCH'S EARLY LIFE.

People in Lynn, Mass., Tell How the Great Speculator Began His Career. Boston Special.

Some of the old residents about Lvnn smile broadly as they read of "Old Hutch." and the way be has been making things hum in Chicago. They know "Hutch" of old, and tell some interesting stories relative to his early days there, for there it was that the millionaire began his business career. Hutchinson made his first start as a clerk for Edwin Foster, of North Reading. Here he was paid $20 a year. His duties were to look after the store, and, when not so employed he had to mend children's shoes in the rear of the store. Mr. Foster employed another lad in the store to whom he gave $30 a year. Ben did not like this distinction in salaries and he rebelled against it. The other boy was paid $10 more year because he could "read writing hand," and was therefore more valuable to his employer than Ben. The other lad had to get up early in the morning to make up the mail, which went by the old-fashioned mail-coach from Reading

Finally Ben became tired of that sort of thing and obtained permission from Mr. Foster to use part of an old shed, which he built into a kind of store with a patched-up door on the side and an old window in front, whereupon was inscribed: "Ben Hutchinson—Boots and Shoes." Here young Ben made boots and shoes on his own secount. Every Saturday he would go to Lynn on foot and buy stock and sell the shoes he had made. He employed several boys about the neighborhood to assist him. When he returned from Lyan he always brought some "gimeracks" with him, which he would trade off to the boys; and although he paid them money for their work on Saturday by Monday, he managed to get it all back in trading with them. Ben was a patural trader. After awhile Ben got tired of his small business, and decided to go into business in Lynn on a larger scale. This the young fellow did. While in Lyon be discovered that some men in the commission business were making more money than he was without doing any hard work. So he concluded to give up the manufacture of shoes and go into the commission business, which he did in 1850, in Pearl street, Boston. After remaining in that office two years he gave up business East and went to Milwankes, where he started in general business. What he has done since then Western speculators know only too well.

initial meeting for this season yesterday afternoon at the New Denison Hotel. In accordance with the usual custom the first day is devoted to the inaugural address by the new president and a banquet. At the latter toasts are offered, making the occasion a feast in a double particular. The parlors were decorated with brilliant autumn flowers and vices, which made them very attractive. The first was given up to social enjoyment, and Mrs. Henry Cobarn, th | president, made a fitting address. At the banquet, which followed, Mrs. E. G. Wiley, the vicepresident, presided, and the toasts were given. "The Love of Home" was responded to by Mrs. W. A. Bell, "Friends" by Miss Margaretta Elder, "County" by Mrs. James M. Winters, and "Humanity" by Miss Elizabeth Nichol-son. On the printed programmes each subject announced was accompanied with an appropriate quotation. Mrs. Coburn was presented with a handsome bouquet of Marechal Niel roses. There was a large attendance, including a number of old members, who have removed to other cities, and a number of guests from out of the city. The meeting was pronounced one of the pleasantest inaugurals that has been held.

There was a very complimentary audience present at the First Baptist Church last evening, on the occasion of the benefit for Miss Minnie Wright. The programme was in charge of the ladies of the church, and they secured some of the best amateur talent to take part. Mr. Chas. Hanson rendered a fine organ solo in place of Mr. Robert A. Newland, previously announced, and was warmly applauded, and, in fact, the ansung very acceptably. Mrs. W. C. Allen recited the "Money Musk," with piane accompaniment, delightfully, and Messra. Taylor and Butler, in their banjo duet, received an encore, as they al ways do. Mr. Frank Hemstreet, the applause for his song, responded with a second one. Mr. Spades played a beautiful arrangement of "How Can I Leave Theel" and "The Suwanee River." Mr. Clarence Hough made his debut before an Indianapolis audience and created a most favorable impression. He gave an imitation of the modern eloentionist, which was so vociferously applauded that he responded with J. W. Riley's "Orphan Annie." admirably rendered. The quartet, composed of Mrs. Schurmann and Misses Thompson, Baggs and Willard sang twice "The Love Song," by Brahms, and the ever-popular "Estitudiatina." Mr. Hanson and Mr. Barclay Walker deserve special commendation for their exquisitely-rendered accompaniments. The concert was both a financial and artistic suc-

Cincinnati Commercial Gazette. General Harrison's speech of yesterday was as full of freshness and force and aptitude, discretion, intelligence and courage, as the Republicans, whose standard-bearer he is, could desire. He turns out his daily speech with the facility and versatility and capacity for eccupation that would make the fortune of an able editor.

The man who said "Let me make the songs of a people and I care not who makes their laws," had he lived in our time and been the publisher of the Ladies' Home Journal and Practical Housekeeper, would have put pictures and stories and talks (How to Do Things) in place of songs. For this is the family age, the age of home and of love-home-making, home-loving, home-keepinghowever a few may wander. The spring of happiness is at home for those who find it out.
